Advice for IVE students to study engineering in the UK: choose your subject without restrictions

Chong Man Hin (left) and Chen Peiying (right) will go to the UK to continue their studies next year.

[News from this newspaper] Current Diploma Examination candidates may be worried about their future studies due to their unsatisfactory results. Fresh graduates of the Hong Kong Institute of Vocational Education (IVE) share their experiences and remind candidates not to set frameworks or restrictions for themselves. They should choose subjects based on their personal interests, actively engage in learning and seize opportunities for value-added, and they will definitely have an ideal future. This year, 13 IVE graduates were awarded the Alistair Harvey Foundation Scholarship and will go to study at universities in the UK in the new academic year.

IVE Higher Diploma in Electrical Engineering graduate Ms Chan Pui-ying will be sponsored to study the Bachelor of Electrical and Electronic Engineering (Honours) programme at the University of Sheffield, UK. She had studied related subjects in high school, but engineering is generally seen as a male-dominated industry, and her father, who has more traditional ideas, once opposed her pursuing a career in engineering. However, she eventually gained recognition and support from her family with her passion, dedication, and outstanding performance.

Diploma in Building Services covers both wind, fire, water and electricity

Another graduate of the Higher Diploma in Building Services Engineering, Mr Chong Man-hin, will go to Scotland in the new academic year to study for a Bachelor of Science in Building Services Engineering at Glasgow Caledonian University. As his parents are in the engineering industry, he was influenced by them since he was a child. The IVE Higher Diploma in Building Services Engineering programme covers a wide range of subjects, namely air-conditioning, fire protection, plumbing and electricity. He was recommended to intern at a local engineering consultancy company. He believes that the learning experience combines both theory and practice, laying a solid foundation for future development. Looking into the future, he hopes to return to Hong Kong to continue his studies and obtain a registered engineer's license so that he can participate in large-scale planning projects such as Hong Kong's "Northern Metropolitan Area" in the future.
