IVE graduates Chan Pui-ying (from left) and Chong Man Hin will continue their studies in the UK.

The results of the Diploma of Secondary Education Examination will be announced tomorrow (20th) and many candidates may be worried about their future studies due to their unsatisfactory results. A fresh graduate from the Hong Kong Institute of Vocational Education (IVE) shared his experience, reminding candidates not to set frameworks or restrictions for themselves, but to choose subjects based on their personal interests. By actively engaging in learning and seizing opportunities to add value to themselves, they will surely have an ideal career path. This year, 13 IVE graduates have been awarded the Alistair Harvey Foundation Scholarship to pursue their studies at universities in the UK.

IVE Higher Diploma in Electrical Engineering graduate Ms Chan Pui-ying will be sponsored to study the Bachelor of Mechanical and Electronic Engineering (Honours) programme at the University of Sheffield, UK. She shared that she had studied relevant subjects in high school, but engineering is generally seen as a male-dominated industry, and her father, who has more traditional ideas, once opposed her pursuit of an engineering career. However, she eventually gained recognition and support from her family with her passion and dedication, as well as her outstanding performance. She said: "Job development should not be restricted by gender. Men and women each have their own strengths. Girls' patience and carefulness can also be utilized in participating in engineering projects." She also believes that smart grid will be a major development trend.

Another graduate of the Higher Diploma in Building Services Engineering, Mr Chong Man-hin, will go to Scotland in the new academic year to study for a Bachelor of Science in Building Services Engineering at Glasgow Caledonian University. He said his parents were in the engineering industry, so he was influenced by them since he was young. The IVE Higher Diploma in Building Services Engineering programme covers a wide range of fields (i.e. air-conditioning, fire protection, plumbing and electricity). He was also recommended to intern at a local engineering consultancy company. He believes that the IVE learning experience combines both theory and practice, laying a solid foundation for his future development. Looking into the future, he hopes to return to Hong Kong to continue his studies and obtain a registered engineer's license so that he can participate in large-scale planning projects such as Hong Kong's "Northern Metropolitan Area" in the future.
